

A Forwardian Poet

Randy Boone

Randy is a forty-four-year-old guy who finally took the plunge and bought a first house in the Poconos. Needless to say, I've recently discovered that owning a new home and writing lots of poems hardly go hand in hand. I teach writing (everything from developmental composition classes to creative writing and poetry writing) and some literature at NCC's Monroe Campus, and I thoroughly enjoy my job. It generally keeps me close to some very good people and away from any awful work. When school is not in session, I spend as much time as possible in the great outdoors, drinking coffee, watching movies, and traveling the U.S. It's quite a life I've got going here. I've recently had work appear in publications such as Down in the Dirt, The Penwood Review, Poet's Espresso, Clark Street Review, Writers' Journal, Spout, Time of Singing, Long Story Short, and Shemom, among others. I also published a chapbook of poems called Ignoble Daydreams for Impudent Minds in 2005 through Violent Publications.

We are honored to present his work titled, "Poetry is."

You'll be able to read his work in Sections D of our magazine through our link at: www.theforwardianartssociety.com/Forwardian-3-Contents.html.
